FLIP-FLOPPING MAIDEN NAMES? MAYBE HERE'S WHY!

by A. Zarzecki

In the course of my research, I found my great-grandmother's maiden name was listed as Zarzecka on about half the documents I discovered; but in all the others, it was recorded as Dabrowska. This was very confusing and cast doubts as to if this was really my ancestor or someone with the exact same name. Based on the documents I had, it was not possible to determine with certainty what her name really was. This could have been resolved by marriage records; unfortunately, the Soviets burned down the rectory of my ancestral parish church in 1942. And while the baptism registers did not burn and go back to the mid-1600s, all the marriage and death records prior to 1810 turned into a pile of ashes.

At times, the priests made errors; but usually in these cases, the maiden name would be wrong on only one record and correct in all other instances. In this case, there was an even 50/50 split between the two names, so something else was going on here. But what? Identical names can repeat frequently in any given parish. There could be five people named Michalina Wolczek all alive at the same time and of the approximately same age. I thought perhaps that there were multiple people with the same name as my ancestor. After careful analysis, I determined that this did not apply in this case. So rather than researching the wrong family, I simply stopped researching this branch of the family. If I chose the wrong name of the two possibilities, then I would have spent many hours researching a family that was not related to me.

I mentioned this research impasse to our colleague Daniel Bućko in Kraków, and he informed me that in certain periods of the nineteenth century, when a woman was widowed, the priests would sometime list the surname of her first husband as her maiden name in any subsequent records. He advised me to go through the records again and to see if there were any birth records of anyone in which both names appeared. Because of the destruction of records during World War II, searching marriage records—which would have been the most obvious path to take and which I would have already done—was not an option.

Thus, I began going through the birth records and BINGO. I learned that my ancestor had been married previously, her married name was Dabrowska, and that's why it kept appearing as her maiden name in later records. She had five children with husband number one. I now knew that this entire group of people were blood relatives and began researching the descendants of these five "new" relatives. Some of their descendants immigrated to the United States, settling mainly in Michigan and Connecticut, and I have added hundreds of new people to my family history.

If you have encountered a similar problem, i.e., two "maiden" names that alternate in various records, consider the possibility that your female ancestor may have been married twice and that her "maiden" name is really her deceased husband's surname. □

Early Vermont Settlers to 1784 now has five new sketches, enumerated below. This database focuses on families that lived in Vermont prior to the end of the Revolutionary War, as identified in Donald Alan Smith's thesis "Legacy of Dissent: Religion and Politics in Revolutionary Vermont 1749 to 1784" (Clark U., Ph.D., 1980).

These five new families came from Windsor, VT, where the Constitution of Vermont was signed in 1777. This constitution created the Republic of Vermont, an independent nation. The Republic of Vermont existed until 1791 when Vermont became part of the United States.

Update to Hampshire County Probate File Papers
by Molly Rogers

This update to the Hampshire County, MA: Probate File Papers, 1660-1889 adds 6,538 additional case records and 175,000 individual file papers. This database is possible through our collaboration with the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court Archives and the Hampshire County Probate & Family Court. The collection contains the records of Hampshire County probate cases filed between 1660 and 1889. The probate cases include wills, guardianships, administrations, and various other types of probate records except adoptions, which are not public records in Massachusetts.

Rather than sequential case numbers, the Hampshire County file papers are numbered by file box (1-267) and then folder within the box. The case number naming convention is [box number]-[folder number]:[page number]. For example, the first page of the first folder in box 1 is "1-1:1".

For more information about this database, please consult our introduction which contains helpful information and examples for understanding and interpreting this collection.
